The Victims of crime. Nils Christie (1986) argues different, they say the victim is socially constructed. For example there is a stereotype of an ideal victim like there is a stereotype of offender. These are weak and blameless individuals who were targets of strangers attacks. There are two approaches to victimology, positivists and critical.

In some situations the grader is called an assessor, particularly something I've heard for practical or vocational assessment rather than marking a paper exam. For example a trainee hairdresser on an apprenticeship must pass a practical exam in which they cut a client's hair and answer oral questions - their grade in that exam would be judged by an "assessor".
