The items you want to change are stored in the registry, but not in a place that you really want to be playing around "by hand".. Since these aren't domain-member computers, you'll want to change these items in the local security policy. You can get there quickly by running "SECPOL.MSC" from the "Start" button.

I know I'm super late to the party, but just wanted to add that if the additional scrubs don't fix issues like this, instead of looking at zdb you can instead just start a scrub, let it run for a couple minutes, and then stop it with zpool scrub -s zstorage. That will work for me at clearing permanent errors for files when all the read/write/checksum errors were at zero.
